SHAREHOLDER CLASS ACTIONS

National Capabilities and Experience

- Rogers & Hardin enjoys a reputation for defending companies against securities lawsuits, including putative class actions brought by corporate shareholders.
- We represent issuers, underwriters, broker-dealers, financial institutions, and other corporations in a variety of industries, as well as officers and directors, defending against securities class action lawsuits.
- Our attorneys have defended over a thousand securities-related matters, appearing in state and federal courts nationwide.
- Our focus from day one is to resolve the case as early as possible.
- We have the experience to try securities class actions effectively when the need arises.

Since the beginning, Rogers & Hardin has enjoyed a reputation for defending companies against securities lawsuits, including putative class actions brought by corporate shareholders. Our attorneys have a strong expertise that has led to our representation of some of the largest financial institutions and brokerage houses in the world.

DEPTH AND BREADTH OF EXPERIENCE

We have represented clients operating in many different industries, including:

- financial services;
- telecommunications;
- medical and healthcare;
- insurance;
- technology;
- real estate;
- entertainment;

- textile manufacturing; and
- hospitality.

FOCUS ON EARLY DISPOSITION, BUT WITH EXCEPTIONAL TRIAL CAPABILITY

Our attorneys have defended over a thousand securities-related matters, appearing in state and federal courts nationwide. Whether they arise out of the public offering of equity and debt, the sale of limited partnerships or mutual funds, or mergers or acquisitions, we have the vast practical experience to tackle these issues directly. Our focus from day one is to resolve the case as early as possible - that usually means by filing a motion to dismiss or seeking the limited and focused discovery necessary to defeat class certification. However, unlike many, our attorneys have the experience to try securities class actions when the need arises.

We staff cases leanly and efficiently. Rogers & Hardin maintains the flexibility of a small firm, where every matter can be given focused attention, while providing a level of sophistication usually associated with much larger firms.
