SECURITIES LITIGATION

Broad Experience, Innovative Solutions

- Our attorneys have broad experience in defending a wide variety of securities matters, including class actions, shareholder derivative litigation, SEC enforcement actions, and broker-dealer arbitrations.
- Our experience involves a wide variety of industries, including financial services, hospitals, health care, technology, nursing homes, insurance, computer services, real estate, textile manufacturing, entertainment, banking, and hospitality.
- We litigate matters involving the full panoply of issues confronting public companies and their officers and directors.

Since the founding of Rogers & Hardin, our attorneys have specialized in defending a wide variety of securities matters, including class actions, derivative litigation, SEC enforcement actions, and broker-dealer arbitrations. Our clients include public companies, financial services firms, and their respective officers, directors and representatives. In the face of unexpected and challenging crises, we have guided our clients through difficult and complex matters, while finding innovative solutions and obtaining excellent results.

Our attorneys who specialize in securities litigation have a depth and range of experience that provides tremendous value to our clients. We have handled securities and shareholder derivative litigation involving a wide variety of industries, including financial services, hospitals, health care, technology, nursing homes, insurance, computer services, real estate, textile manufacturing, entertainment, banking, and hospitality.

Our attorneys routinely litigate matters involving accounting and public reporting issues, the public offering of equity and debt, the sale of limited partnerships and of mutual funds, proxy contests, and the full range of mergers and acquisitions disputes. We also regularly represent directors serving on demand review and special litigation committees, charged with investigating and making determinations with respect to shareholder demands.
